

07 / Founder / personal brand

The thinking has a person behind it.

Christobal Grego. Show the decisions behind the image, not just a founder title.

Christobal Grego / Why this shot?

CHRISTOBAL GREGO.

Founder / Meta Pacific

Why a founder series. The founder can connect a visual choice to a business problem. That gives the work a human voice and shows judgment without turning every post into a company pitch.

A repeatable conversation, not a script to pretend he said.

Open with the frame

Show a real shot and ask: “What did this need to explain?”

Get one specific decision

Ask why that angle, route or interaction was chosen. Keep the real answer in his own words.

Show the consequence

Cut to the relevant footage or tour action. Let the evidence support the answer.

Leave a useful question

“What would you need to understand before visiting this project?”

Three useful founder topics.

What did we leave out?

How restraint improves a film or a tour. Show an edit decision, not a generic lesson about creativity.

Founder-led content should account for roughly 20–30% of the ecosystem, as the brief requests. Plan three founder/process contributions within a fifteen-post sequence; project, team and product stories carry the rest. Proposed prompts and layout, not quotations attributed to Christobal. Use an approved portrait or real interview footage for the production version; no substitute person or generated likeness is used.

When is a render useful?

How to explain a future space without blurring the line between proposed and built.

What makes a brief workable?

The questions that turn a request for “a nice video” into a clear production plan.
