

01 / Brand audit

The work is stronger than its wrapper.

Keep the range. Make the intelligence behind it visible.

A capability gap, not a subject shortage.

Existing project imagery. The visual range is already there.

Meta Pacific spans production, aerial, FPV, tours, technology and growth. A feed that only presents beautiful places makes the company look narrower than the work it can do.

The change. Move from “look what we filmed” to “look what this helps you understand.” Keep the footage. Give it a point of view, a clear category and a next step.

Keep. Evolve. Remove.

Keep

The name, real project footage, sense of place and ability to connect creative production with digital experiences.

Evolve

Small-size logo clarity, type hierarchy, captions, source labels and the link between a visual result and the thinking behind it.

Remove

Competing text styles, unsupported sales claims, decorative annotations and the expectation that every post needs the same composition.

What the review actually shows.

Identity & typography

The previous stacked identity has presence. Dense letterforms and small details lose clarity at corner-logo scale. The new system separates a calm signature from expressive campaign type.

Instagram

The Rote, Paradise Peak and Cocoon covers have clear stopping power, but use very different information structures. Review the individual choices in the creative-review task.

Basis: supplied identity and positioning material, original quotation #578, current website, three Instagram cover/caption studies and selected source frames. This is not a performance audit of the full account.

Color & image

Project imagery is varied. Use a consistent mark and a limited palette within each frame, rather than forcing every photograph into the same color treatment.

Commercial

Quotation #578 contains concrete scope and prices. Wide letter spacing and long blocks slow scanning. The redesign groups the same information without quietly changing the offer.
