

From a good shot to a clear next step.

A seven-section homepage direction. The company site is an application of the brand, not the assignment navigation.

Seven sections, one reading path.

Hero

A strong project image and a clear promise: understand a place before you get there.

Positioning

Explain the connection between cinematic production, spatial experiences and commercial use.

Capabilities

Group by need: show a place, explain a project, create an experience, support growth.

Selected work

Use a few projects with a brief, a decision and the actual output.

Immersive / technology

Show a usable tour or product interaction, with a clear distinction between captured and rendered material.

About / process

Introduce Christobal and the team through how they work: brief, plan, produce, refine, deliver.

Contact / project brief

One next step. Ask what needs to be understood, who it is for and where it will be used.

Why this order

Start with the work, then explain its value. Show proof before asking for the brief. Services and prices support that story; they do not become the assignment's main navigation.

What the Webflow references change.

Use Warhol Arts' strong type/image tension for the opening. Use Oddly Made's editorial pacing to let project photography breathe. Preserve the content and interactions we already built, but keep this company-homepage exploration inside the landing-page task.
